Kohl describes as half French, half Portuguese, may be traced up to the present day, Thus, besides Bai Sablon, already mentioned, not far from it we have Golfo de Petis, and in quite recent maps we have the name Pettys Island, or Petits Island applied to a small island off Shelburne harbour, which, from its capaciousness, might well be described as a small gulf. 1 Then, again, there is La beau bai, which Kohl supposes to be represented by the French name still retained of Port Joli. But the latter, as to location, better represents Porto Formoso, on the map attributed to Sebastian Cabot, of date 1544, though the first may also refer to the same. Then we have Des Jardins, and farther east R. des Jardins, which plainly appear in a corrupted form in the present Jordan River, at whose mouth is a capacious basin forming a convenient shelter for fishermen. 2 1 We give a copy of this from Kohl. There are only a few names on this map to the eastward, and none that can be recognized at the present day. The fact, however, that they gave names to places, even if the map makers knew not how to place them correctly, shows that they were well known to them. The names now referred to are all near the south end of the province, and in the same neighbourhood we might mention, among existing names, Baccaro Point, at the east end of Barrington...
