Evelyn; my Lord turned hastily to the window, and Mrs. Gordon to her feat. Lady Mappleton, Ellen and Caroline formed a little group, half angry and half laughing at Winifred s distress, who stood crying behind her Mistress s chair; when a servant entered with Joseph s humble duty to his lord, and beg d to fp eak with him. This locket I fee is not to be found, said Gordon, Joseph wants Lord Claver;ton s interference in his favor. Lord Claverton a little ashamed of a man uvre of his servant s, which he was conscious had his sanction, was rather embarrassed; he did not chuse however to appear as a party in so vexatious a business in its present stats, much less did he wish any thing should transpire, that could lead to his concern in it originally. The servant waiting for an answer; Ellen begged Lord Claverton, would have Joseph in, that we may hear, continued she, the history of this famous locket, and his Lordship still hesitating, Joseph entered, followed by an elderly woman. Winifred was in her way, no less ashamed of the part she had acted, than his Lordship, and fearful of the consequences not only to herself, but poor tear Mr. Joseph, as she had received the locket of Mr. Evelyn under solemn promise of persuading Ellen to wear k for his fake, but had been coaxed out of it by Joseph, who told her it...
