Excerpt: . . . of comity, which a nation was at liberty to concede or refuse, and not a right of another nation to claim or enforce, as strictly arising under the Law of nations. Could an action be maintainable in a Court of Justice to enforce a right to slave property in New England or any other non slaveholding state, in a case not covered by the Constitution, or by a Treaty The argument, ab inconvenienti, may be addressed with great force to Great Britain on this subject; but it strikes me to furnish a ground for mutual Treaty Stipulations as to slave property and the Slave trade, fit to be pressed, in negotiations, although difficult to support as a positive public right independent of Treaty. See the Armistad, 15 Peters. A. and the Penna. Slave Case in Supreme Court last terra. Believe me most truly yours...
